THE PROHIBITION TICKET

The Prohibition Convention in Chicago nominated John G. Woolley, one of the editors of the New York Voice, for president, and Henry B. Metcalf for vice president. The platform adopted is devoted entirely to the Prohibition issue, but a declaration in favor of woman suffrage was adopted as a separate resolution. It arraigns both the old parties on the ground that they are dominated by the liquor interests. The following brief summary of the history of the Prohibition movement will be interesting to many:

"The first independent party action the Prohibitionists ever took was in 1869, when a committee appointed by the sixth national temperance convention at Cleveland issued a call for a national Prohibition convention. It was held in Chicago September 1, 1869, and a central committee was appointed. The first national nominating convention was held at Columbus February 22, 1872, and nominated James Black, of Pennsylvania, for president. He received only 5,608 votes. In 1876 Green Clay Smith, of Kentucky, was nominated and the vote for him advanced to 9,522. At the following presidential election, 1880, General Neal Dow, of Maine, took up the standard and sent the vote up a little, scoring 10,305. This rate of progress was hardly calculated to bring about an early success, and it was not until the election of 1884, when Ex-Governor John P. St. John, of Kansas, was the candidate, that the Prohibitionists received much national comfort. He jumped the vote to 151,809. In 1888 Clinton B. Fisk was the candidate. His vote was 249,907. In 1892 John Bidwell was at the head of the Prohibition ticket. The total vote was 164,133. In 1896 Joshua Levering was the candidate and polled 132,007 votes, or less than half the vote of 1892."

THE MAN OR THE TIMES

Sometimes we find a man who is thought to be wise yet wicked. But the thing is paradoxical. There is here a confusion of terms. A man may be learned and wicked. The two terms exclude each other. The wicked man is, at best, one who is without restraint morally, which is inseparable from intellectual aberration. The wise man is the well-balanced man intellectually, which is impossible without moral balance. From the nature of the case we could not say that the man who has not harnessed, and somewhat tamed, those wild steeds of his organism, known as impulses, passions, appetites, is an intellectually well-balanced man. The very fact of their unrestraint shows this. For nature gave him these passions and appetites not to ruin his body, and deform his character; but to elevate the one and transform the other. They are so much raw material out of which he is expected to manufacture the best product. His failure to do this constitutes his unwisdom. The ancients well understood this. Pharaoh is represented as calling Joseph "a man in whom the spirit of God is." He called him so from the fact that he was discreet and wise. No doubt the episode of Potiphar's wife added to Joseph's reputation in this respect. So the chief artist of the tabernacle in the wilderness, Bezaleel, is said to have been prepared by God for his work by being filled with all wisdom. Numbers of men (and women) of every profession and avocation, who have taken the suggestion of James and asked for wisdom. And wisdom has come to them. The age has felt it and are feeling it. Some of them are giving it expression in substantial institutions, educational, hospital, artistic, churchly and otherwise. Some are expressing it in individual and prudent assistance to individuals. Some are expressing it in the advocacy of reforms, in advance of the times, and with that living sacrifice upon the altar of devotion which promises large things for man in the near future. The conditions are cumulative and progressive. So that there is no pause in the work that is doing, inspired by the spirit of God, and all of it has, as its burden, the uplifting of the lives of the components of what is termed society. Men are making money for God. Men are teaching for God (in and out of the pulpit). Men are building houses, writing books, selling and buying, digging up the past and unveiling the future, all with the same central purpose—the hastening of the kingdom. These are the men for the times. They do not constitute the great majority; but they are already sufficiently numerous to be a potent factor. The time must come, under such cumulative conditions, when most men will see life as these see it. Then must we behold a regenerated and uplifted world; for the wisdom of God will preside in the hearts of all men. Then must every vexed problem disappear.

THE PEOPLE WHO HANDLE EVERYTHING.

IN THE ALIEN LAND

We are thinking of our dear ones
Far across the weary world,
Where the hostile peoples threaten
Under battle flags unfurled;
We are praying for our dear ones,
Help them in the bitter day,
Thou, for whom they wage a conflict,
Jesus, Master, help we pray.

Gentle maidens, loving matrons,
Men, serene and true and strong;
Brave to dare the utmost evil,
Swift to fight the ancient wrong;
Keep them safe, O heavenly Father!
Where'er thy servants stand,
Round them gather all thine angels;
Guard them in the alien land!

Lift them up in lofty courage,
Drive the angry fiends back,
Thou art able, O Jehovah!
And with thee there is no lack;
Give thyself to those who need thee;
"Thine own, O Christ! we pray,
Stand thyself for thy disciples,
In the weary world today.

Save and keep thy little children
Who have given their idols up;
Strengthen them for every peril,
Sweeten every bitter cup;
Lord, be with thine own to bless them,
Life or death, be thou beside
Those who need thee; through the waters,
Life or death, be thou their guide.
—Margaret E. Sangster.
